Everyone has moments of inspiration, grand or simple. It happens all the time. Whether through you, around you, or because of you, events happen that change your thinking. For that instant you can feel it all, like a message was sent straight to your soul. You soak it in, rehearse the enlightened statement that you are going to shout from your grand stage, sing along with the great musical masters, the whole nine yards. And then you notice that you are just sitting in the middle of your living room and casually brush off the experience while moving on to get something “more productive” done.

These quick inspired moments, simple or grand, have now become my life’s work. It always seemed like such a waste to me, the casual brush off of inspiration. I wanted to be able to capture that enlightened feeling, bottle it up in a jar and rush out the door yelling, “take a look at this!”

I knew from an early age that I wanted to be an artist. It was an easy decision to make as a child. Very simple, I like this and I want to do this for the rest of my life. Done. Formal art training mastered the technique, and age has mastered the understanding of what true inspiration can affect. I based the collection of MaryJack Studios on my two children, Jackson and MaryAnn. I can think of no other subjects of inspiration for my art with such relevance and purpose.

My pieces are simply a jar in which to display the brilliant inspiration of children.
